

The DC LERA Board of Governors invites you to the monthly luncheon meeting Tuesday, September 22, 2015...

Labor Reporting in the 21st Century with guest speaker

Lydia DePillis
Washington Post

Lydia DePillis covers labor and employment for The Washington Post. She has a sharp eye for stories that change how we see the world of work.

The topics she's recently covered include paid family leave, overtime overhaul, exploited workers and the Volkswagen organizing drive.

Before coming to The Post, Lydia worked at The New Republic Magazine, where she wrote about how the new world of digital technology was dramatically changing business, politics, work and social relations.

Lydia was a journalist even before she graduated from Columbia in 2009 with a degree in history. At college, she worked on a blog and magazine about campus life and politics.

We are pleased to announce that Lydia will be speaking at our September luncheon. Please join us for a look at the thrills and chills behind the curtain of labor reporting...and bring a guest!
